Principal Chatter

This week may have begun with a long weekend for our students, however, all our education staff were at school hard at work.

All the teachers and teacher aides rotated through both Reading and Writing workshops as well as a session on Positive Behaviour support.

The Literacy workshops were designed specifically for teachers of students with cognitive disabilities. They were developed by the University of North Carolina and provide a very structured method that has proven to enhance student’s ability to move towards conventional understandings of reading and writing, that we have spent our entire curriculum budget on resources and training to support the Four Blocks approach to teaching Literacy.

Already we are seeing evidence that our students are experiencing greater successes. We are confident that 2016 will see high performing classrooms that are fully focused on literacy and communication.
